Autistic Individuals as Agents of Change: Experiences from the Green ASC VET Project

From the outset, autistic individuals were not only beneficiaries of Green ASC VET activities but also active contributors to the design and development of project results.

Their experiences, perspectives, and recommendations directly influenced educational content, digital tools, and practical guidelines that now form an important part of the project's outcomes.

This participatory approach enabled the consortium to create solutions that genuinely address the needs of autistic learners and job seekers. Rather than relying on assumptions, project partners worked closely with autistic individuals to ensure relevance, usability, and real-world impact.

Many participants report that their involvement in the project helped them develop new skills, increase self-confidence, and gain valuable insights into education, training, and employment opportunities.

Green ASC VET demonstrates that autistic individuals are not only recipients of support but also important contributors whose knowledge and experiences can help shape more inclusive educational and workplace environments.
